To Italy. We are going. Such was the salutation and response on a December evening in 1887 on entering home after having spent the afternoon at a missionary convention. My wife had read the letter received from the Bishop, and hence the announcement. We were not wholly unprepared for the call, since the Missionary Secretary had informed us a few days before, that our appointment to a foreign Mission was under consideration of the authorities and had asked, How would you like to go to Mexico? Have not given the matter any consideration, was the reply. Well, think of it, and let me know. It needed little thought, for we were ready...
