CHAPTER X DOMESTIC LIFE AND FOREIGN TOURS IT was a delightful thing to see Mr. Hoare in the midst of his family. Some of us remember only the later years of his life, but the enjoyment which he then took in the company of his grandchildren was very charming to witness. Those, however, who recollect the time when his ten boys and girls were growing up around him, speak with much pleasure of the way in which he threw himself into all their feelings and pursuits, and the skill which he evinced in drawing out their characters. He tried hard, as he touchingly says in one of his letters, to be father and mother in one. In the bringing up of his children religion formed such a bright part of their life that allusions to it came in quite naturally into ordinary conversation. On one occasion, five years before Mrs. Hoare's death, he makes the following entry in his journal: -- September 1st, 1858.--Very much interested to-day by one of his younger boys. I was talking at dinner about the great geological periods of creation. He said, But it took place in one week. I answered, Those days were probably long periods, as it says, One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one...
